Egypt is regarded as one of the world's oldest travel destinations. Many of its houses are built like bulwarks and painted in natural colours, so they seem to blend in with the desert or mountains like stone chameleons; their only openings onto the street are narrow hatches. Whoever is permitted a look behind the façades discovers enchanting patios, pools bordered by palms, or hidden terraces. The interiors bear witness to a clear preference for luxurious accessories, hand-woven carpets and painted walls, gold-threaded fabrics and soft cushions, filigree carvings and mosaics of coloured glass. These pages allow you to look into an Egyptian interior and help you to understand its exterior — and to feel somewhat closer to the sphinx on your next visit.
