The Greatest Traveller of His Time, 1892–1952

Burton Holmes, edited by Genoa Caldwell

From the day he bought his first camera, in 1883, until shortly before his death in 1958, Burton Holmes is believed to have seen and chronicled more of the world over a longer period of time than anyone before or since. His illustrated lectures, or travelogues, played to full houses of people in evening dress at the finest venues all over the United States. This magnificent volume reproduces hundreds of Holmes' extraordinary photographs. They bear witness to over 50 years of world history, through their direct and moving relationship with people from all around the globe. Although today it may be commonplace to travel the world and record what we see, there is nothing commonplace about the pictures collected in this remarkable book.
