Dennis Hopper: Photographs 1961-1967

We may know and love the great actor for his screen appearances and occasional hell-raising – actually, he did a lot of hell-raising – but Dennis Hopper is also an extremely fine photographer. During his earlier years, he carried a camera that his wife gave him everywhere he went. From celebrity shindigs to civil-rights protests, and, of course, film sets, he captured shots of the people he knew. With intimate pictures of the likes of Paul Newman (above), Andy Warhol and Tina Turner, it's a remarkable collection of photographs documenting one of the US's most tumultuous decades. The book has been limited to just 1,500 copies with each one being signed by Mr Hopper himself – so, as with his finest films, this book will get better with age. £450
